Sudan Emergency Food Relief

The remote region of Kordofan, Sudan, has swelled in population since conflict broke out in the country a year ago. This deeply impoverished area saw an influx of 700,000 desperate people looking for refuge, amplifying the population's already dire food situation.

To worsen the crisis, the most recent harvest of sorghum—the region's staple—was devastated by drought and swarms of locusts, which eliminated 40 percent of their usual food supply. With nowhere to turn, people rummage the muddy ground and barren trees for seeds, weeds, branches, and leaves to consume.

Samaritan's Purse is rushing convoys of food to help these families survive. Each 16-truck convoy carries 800 tons of food, enough to sustain 33,000 people for the next three months. Every family is given a basket full of corn, oil, beans, and salt, and we are providing special nutrient-packed peanut paste for children, who suffer the most severe consequences of prolonged malnutrition.

However, Kordofan will soon be inaccessible as the rainy season intensifies and the dirt roads turn to swamps. In a matter of weeks, our truckloads will be unable to reach these anguishing people. Our window of opportunity is closing and we must act quickly. Your partnership with Samaritan's Purse will feed the hungry in Jesus' Name as we provide life-sustaining food for suffering families in South Kordofan.
